About the Programme

Course Overview The agriculture sector of India is regarded as the backbone of the economy. Agriculture is among the biggest employers in India, as well as in many other nations of the world, and satisfies the nutritional requirements of the population. This programme enables students to tackle the various challenges that the agricultural industry faces – such as the activities and roles of the government, a competitively charged environment, globalization's side effects and the rapidly changing technological pace. Agricultural education has always focused on disciplines that are associated with the improvement of productivity in agrarian farms. Students can contribute in several ways to tackle the shortage of food and nutrients and try to increase the production of food grains, store them in a proper way and more.
